Active Weather Warnings, Watches and Advisories by County:

http://www.wrh.noaa.gov/sto/brief/wwa_bc_cal.php

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

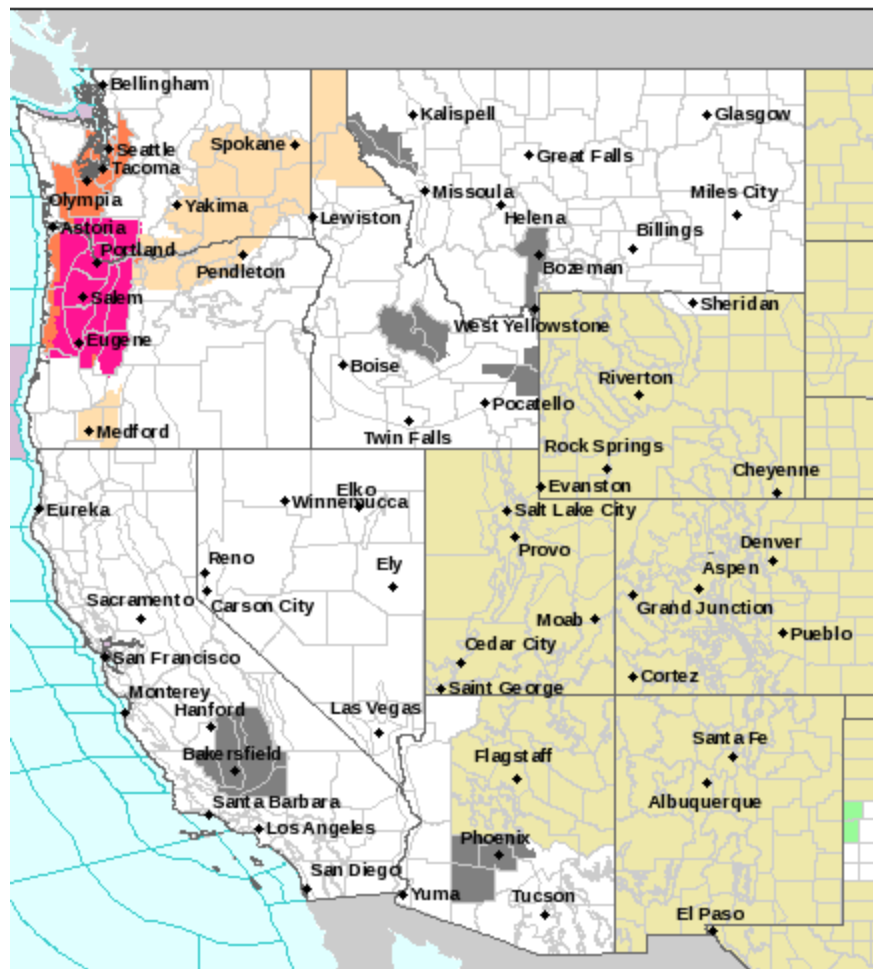

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

A weak low pressure trough will be over the region through Friday. Warm and dry conditions will prevail. Temperatures will be 2-5 degrees above normal and humidity will drop to 7-17% in inland areas. Poor overnight relative humidity (RH) recovery will be common inland on mid and upper slopes. The north coast will also be very dry with gusty north east/offshore winds (gusts to 25-35 mph) during nights and mornings and poor overnight RH recovery, mainly over the mid and upper slopes. A light sea breeze wind will bring cooler and more humid conditions inland at lower elevations for a few hours during afternoons and evenings. A deeper marine layer and stronger onshore flow will keep coastal areas from Mendocino County south cool and humid. On Saturday the weak trough will move east, but little change is expected in weather conditions. A deeper low pressure trough to the north and west beginning Sunday will cause increasing south west flow over the region, and south to west winds gusting to 25-30 mph will combine with low RH to increase fire potential a bit over the higher terrain and east of the Cascade-Sierra crest. A deeper marine layer will move farther inland, and the north coast will finally benefit from the cool humid marine air as well. There is disagreement on when the trough will move inland. Right now it looks like Tuesday or Wednesday. When the trough moves inland it doesn't appear that showers or thunderstorms will occur, but winds leading up to the passage of the trough may gust to 40 mph or more over the higher terrain and east of the Cascade-Sierra crest.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

A trough will linger over the area the next few days which will maintain moderate onshore flow. This will result in breezy conditions in the desert interface regions during the afternoon hours. Expect west to southwest winds of 15-25 mph with gusts to 40 mph across the Antelope Valley and Banning Pass and nearby areas such as the Kern County Mountains and "Canyon Country" of northern Los Angeles County through Saturday. The onshore flow will result in widespread and deep marine layer coverage which will likely bring higher humidity portions of the Chimney, Soberanes and Rey fires each night. Temperatures will be near to perhaps a few degrees below normal through Saturday with highs in the 70s along the coast to the upper 80s to lower 90s in the valleys to 105 in the deserts. Relative humidity (RH) recovery above and inland from the marine layer will be in the 15-20% over most areas each afternoon. Early next week, an expansive area of high pressure over the Southwest will back into Southern California, bringing much warmer and drier weather. Temperatures Sunday will surge upwards 5-10 degrees, and by Monday and Tuesday, the valleys and lower foothills will likely reach the 100-105 range. Minimum RH will drop into the single digits over most areas below 6,000 feet away from the coast. The hottest days appear to be Monday and Tuesday before another trough brings cooler and windier weather back to the region by the middle of next week. No thunderstorms are expected through the period.
